Julie Haus

Julie Haus
A year after the debut of her eponymous line, Haus has become the fashion industry's latest darling. She's best known for her clean silhouettes and charming details, but has looked to bold colors, black-and-white designs, and gently infused metallics for her fall 2007 futuristic-mod-meets-London's-swingin'-sixties collection.

ON HER LIST:

- Roger Vivier boots
- Katherine Kwei bobo bag for day, Gustto Cala clutch for evening
- Vintage Ovando Salvi rings (purchased on the corner of Wooster and Prince Streets)
- Yves Saint Laurent Tribute Mary Janes in black
- Julie Haus Oxford dress in black and silver argyle brocade

Migale Levinson, Karen Reinitz, and Ana Maria Pimentel

AKA New York

The triple threat behind AKA New York, Levinson, Reinitz, and Pimentel got together in 2004 when working as fashion editors for Elle. Deciding that the market was missing clothing that was fashionable yet accessible, they blended their individual styles to create unique, easy pieces that could work into their own wardrobes—and now, those of their legion of customers—and be worn in a variety of ways.

ON THEIR LIST:

- American Apparel oversize men's T-shirt
- YSL wide-leg pants
- Sweaters from the new AKA cashmere collection
- Chanel gray jersey quilted bag
- Marc Jacobs lapas and malachite chunky bracelets

ON DECK EBB & FLOW

The Really, Really Big Picture

Ever felt your knees go weak (That ravine is how far down?!) or your stomach do flip-flops (Watch out for the rapids!) while watching an Imax megaflick? Well, here's the guy to blame.
by Jeffrey Sionim

DURING THE LOVE HEALS barbecue at Luna Farm, my wife and I happened to sit with Richard L. Gelfond, who looks like the quintessential guy next door. But Rich Gelfond isn't that guy. With his business partner, Brad Wechsler, Gelfond, a lawyer by training, co-owns Imax Corporation and also once worked as an investment banker for Drexel Burnham before he and Wechsler left that firm to buy businesses.

During one of his children's spring breaks, he traveled to the Smithsonian in Washington, DC, and was impressed by the Imax theater there. "A friend at an investment bank was selling Imax, and the book showed up," says Gelfond. "We put the deal together, and two months after we bought it, we brought it public through Goldman Sachs."

Good move. "At that time," explains Gelfond, "Imax was mostly in museums, and the movies were generally about bears and whales." There are now 300 Imax theaters in 35 countries worldwide, and the firm has also developed the technology to run Hollywood films through a computer and turn them into Imax films. To date, Apollo 13, Superman, Night at the Museum, two Spider-Man films, and Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix have been converted. Original films Imax created with Gelfond as cochair and co-CEO include Deep Sea 3-D, Space Station 3-D, and NASCAR 3-D.

"When you see Rolling Stones at the Max," says Gelfond, a closet rocker, "it feels like you're in the front row at the concert. People stand and light their lighters." Besides hanging out with Mick Jagger in the locker room at Madison Square Garden before a concert, one geeky aspect of this job that Gelfond has appreciated was getting to know the astronauts. "They're cool people," he says. One mentioned to him that he would "sleep standing next to the window in space. There'd be lightning all over the Earth, and he'd play Grateful Dead music."

Far out!

Gelfond also takes pride in the fact that the Imax crew abandoned making its film about Everest (Everest) to help rescue Sandy Pittman's group when they became trapped by a blizzard near the summit. "They showed heroism," Gelfond says of his crew, "and then they went back up to finish the project."

The heady future of Imax: "We're in the process of perfecting a digital system," says Gelfond. "You'll be able to see the Super Bowl live in Imax, and rock concerts. And there are no film costs, so you'll be able to show more films each year."

Gelfond's other pet project is chairing the board at the Stony Brook College Foundation, which, by the way, owns the Pollock-Krasner House & Study Center in the Springs, Stony Brook, located in Brookhaven off Exit 68 on the LIE (but a world away from clubs like Pink Elephant and Dume), partners with Harvard, Yale, and Princeton to study brain chemistry, cancer, and how the universe was formed, Gelfond says.

Note: Thanks to Michael Carl of Shear Genius for assistance with this week's list. H

Solutions for making the most of your shape

Jennifer Lopez How to wear an oversize tunic

CREATING
Though voluminous,
the plain gray tunic
is cinched with a belt

YOU THE FASHION JURY

TAMARA MELLON'S DIVORCE BATTLE

Angelica: «This outfit looks polished, but the combination of low-cut top, skin-tight skirt, clutch bag, bare legs AND stilettos is just a tad too in-your-face sexy for court.»

Catherine: «Tamara clearly means business: figure-hugging pencil skirt, waist-cinching belt, sky-high stilettos, plus oh-so-now fold-over clutch.»

Deborah: «We expect nothing less than killer heels and the fantastic cream clutch from the shoe queen herself. Just as well she has the legs to carry off that skirt.»

JENNIFER LOPEZ JOINS THE JURY

Angelica: «Ha ha! This is Jennifer Lopez trying to look like a 'real' person for jury duty. The cashmere might be don't-look-at-me grey, but superstar shades and the fashion bag shriek, 'Yes! It's me! J-Lo!'»

Catherine: «I hate this look, mostly because it's wrapped in who's rug! So un-chic. Dodgy stonewashed jeans and a polo-neck under her scarf (a little excessive for May?) finish it off. Fabulous bag, though.»

Deborah: «There's no excuse for cheap-looking jeans and a knitted cardigan that resembles a dressing gown.»

HEATHER MILLS AT COURT IN LONDON

Angelica: «This '60s-style coat is such a now shape: drop waist, bubble hem. But it's way too fussy for court; she looks a bit like the Queen.»

Catherine: «A vision in Stella McCartney: this structured coat looks effortless and I've always been a fan of these over-the-knee boots.»

Deborah: «Classy coat, but the rest of the outfit - clumpy schoolteacher footwear and old-fashioned, checked knee-length skirt - is a mismatch, not unlike her marriage.»

Despite wearing wide stripes, Cameron creates a lean body line with knee-high boots, says Oren Hayut of playdunk.com. Ashanti's combo of three-quarter leggings and boots shortens her frame and makes her look stumpy.

Dressed to impress
By wearing a lace dress underneath her wool trench, Ugly Betty's Becki creates a glamorous outfit. While the peacock-blue shade is stunning on Eva, her styling is more casual, which stops her from making a bigger splash.

Animal lovers will not approve but the latest collection of bags from Katherine Kwei is absolutely gorgeous. Other than the fact that they are made up of mainly lamb skin and watersnake skin, the most interesting feature is the knots, twists and fringes. They are definitely something different from the usual kind of handbags/clutches.
